Dr. Alison Carter, Assistant Professor, Department of Anthropology, University of Oregon

Beads, trade, and the emergence of complexity in ancient Southeast Asia

Around 500 B.C. people in South Asia (primarily India and Sri Lanka) began interacting with people in Southeast Asia. Some of the earliest indicators of this contact are stone and glass beads that were imported from South Asia and widely traded across Southeast Asia. These beads were important symbols of prestige and power. In this presentation, Dr. Carter discusses her study of beads from 12 archaeological sites in Cambodia and Thailand and illuminates for us what can be learned from those beads about early trade networks, various means of exchange, as well as who may have been facilitating such trading and wearing the beads. This event is co-sponsored by the Institute of East Asian Studies at U.C. Berkeley.
